Functional.

The Admiral Television Model 30A14-S was introduced in 1948, making it a classic example of late 1940s American television design. This model features a 10-inch black-and-white screen and is housed in a stylish wooden cabinet, reflecting the post-war emphasis on combining functionality with aesthetic appeal in home electronics. Admiral televisions like the 30A14-S were popular for their reliability and affordability, making them a common fixture in American households of the time.

This model is ideal for movie or TV sets depicting the late 1940s to early 1950s, especially in scenes set in middle-class American homes. Its authentic design adds a touch of period accuracy to any production.
