Telephone Switchboard

Contact for pricing

This is an 80-point telephone switchboard manufactured by Bell System under the Western Electric brand. It features memo slots on top for easy organization and push-button controls. Switchboards like this were widely used in the mid-20th century to manually connect telephone calls before the advent of automated systems. The design reflects the robust, practical nature of communication technology during that era and would be suitable for sets depicting offices or communication hubs from the 1950s to 1970s.
